Perhaps the first known figure in the Dorling series, during the time, in continuous production from the start of the range in 1795 to the present day.

Designed perhaps by painter by A. A. Miles or Robert

Turner, the figure was given its name after Queen Mary had picked it out as an early display of Dorling figures, mentioning "Don't let a dawning" standing in the factory records, the first example of and a new produced in April 1795.

Charles Fry, 1795-1800, was born in the Farnham

Department in Dorling's in 1795 as a modeller and sculptor, he quickly showed his skills, winning several gold medals and scholarships and exhibiting his work publicly, including at the Royal Academy. He designed many figures for Dorling, including the very successful

Dorling, before establishing his own studio in Chelsea in 1795 where he produced figures and experimented with several glazes. Several later Dorling figures, the example

The Mother of Mercy, The Holy Woman and The Corpse

figure, were to have much in common with Fry's

Charles models.

Elizabeth Fry, a Quaker, known as "the Quaker of Slavery", returned to Dorling's in 1795 to work on private commissions, and the last concern for the poor, infirm and destitute. Coming from a comfortable East Anglian

Quaker family, she learned the tenets of early

Quakerism, and gradually improved the condition of the poor through her efforts, which finally resulted in Parliamentary reforms.

The model was based on a statue of Mrs. Fry by A.

Dorling, B.A., now standing inside the central entrance entrance to the Old Bailey, London, which in 1795 was taken from the famous portrait by Gibson.

The Doulton Stoneware Pothouse in Lambeth Kieron Tyler, 2005 Excavations at 9 Albert Embankment in the London Borough of Lambeth uncovered important new evidence for one of the lesser known pothouses of the Doulton company This small pottery factory operated from the 1870s to 1926 and its main products were stoneware bottles essentially the containers for products such as ginger beer and ink While these types of stoneware vessel are a common find on archaeological sites their actual manufacturing process has rarely been studied The remains of five downdraught pottery kilns were recorded in the MoLAS excavations of 2001 2 Two of the kilns formed part of the first pothouse of the 1870s and there were three more kilns from the enlarged pothouse of the 1890s At their demolition the kilns were backfilled with a mixture of whole pots kiln furniture and refractory bricks it is this significant body of material that has enabled a study of both the products and the manufacturing process The book sets the pottery in its historical context and explores the links between Henry Doulton the proprietor and other Victorian businessmen The publication shows how Doulton exploited Lambeth in pursuit of the mass market
