

SENSORY RECEPTORS

- A receptor
 - is a cell, often a specialized neuron,
 - suited by its structure and function to respond to a particular form of energy, such as sound.
 - Function: Convert that energy into a neural response.
- Adequate stimulus: energy form for which receptor is specialized to detect
 - Due to the imperfect specialization of receptors, other stimuli will often produce responses as well.
 - For example, if you apply pressure to the side of your eyeball (through the lid) you will see a circular dark spot.
