Sense Of Where You Are:

You're What You Sense Ven. Bhikkhu Mihita, 2024-03-14 Buddha is known as a religious teacher which of course he is But few pay attention to his methodology that his teachings were arrived at what could only be called scientifically i.e. through a strict objectivity Over six years leading up to his Enlightenment what he did was to train his mind to be free from attachment not only to the world but even to concepts paradi and views dihi of any kind as well The result of such fine tuning of the introscope of his mind was total objectivity a level a scientist could only envy It is in this objectivity that the Buddha declared that the only reality of the world for a given individual is what one gets through the senses including the mind sense and senses alone and indeed that you are what you sense If one finds spiritual comfort in the Buddha's teachings I will have been humbled if these pages provide you with some scientific comfort as well the two being for the Buddha not mutually exclusive Those who are looking for his scientific concepts I have boxed them for easy identification and listed them all together at the end

A Sense of Place Annie Davy, 2019-02-07 Tried and tested accessible strategies that support the wellbeing and learning journey of children through mindfulness with a focus on learning outdoors and connecting with the world Being outside and connecting with nature is key to young children's learning and wellbeing especially in a busy fast changing and digitalised world Outdoors children can more easily connect to their bodies and learn about themselves and others and how to be in the world They use their senses to explore understand and become mindful of the earth and the people around them But how can Early Years practitioners best support young children as they engage with nature while also passing on the values about the future of the planet A Sense of Place is an easily accessible guide that will make outdoor learning more interesting and fun while also supporting children's development of resilience and resourcefulness so that they can survive and thrive in the world as they grow
