Rheumatoid arthritis (chronic polyarthritis)

Rheumatoid arthritis is a chronic inflammatory disease that affects the joints. It is characterized by synovial inflammation, which leads to the formation of pannus, a thick layer of inflamed tissue that grows into the joint space. This process causes joint swelling, pain, and eventually joint destruction. The disease is more common in women than in men and typically begins between the ages of 30 and 50. The disease is characterized by a period of active inflammation, followed by a period of remission. The disease is more common in children than in adults and typically begins between the ages of 10 and 20. It is a systemic disease, meaning it can affect other parts of the body besides the joints.
