

Origin and Migration of Germ Cells in Vertebrates

In vertebrates, there is an established germ line that separates from the somatic cells early in development; their germ cells often do not arise within the gonad itself. Rather, the primordial germ cells (PGCs) arise elsewhere and migrate into the developing gonads (PGCs give rise to the germ cells). The first step in gametogenesis involves forming the PGCs and getting them into the genital ridge as the gonad is forming. "The primordial germ cells in an embryo develop into stem cells that in an adult generate the reproductive gametes (sperm or eggs), i.e. PGCs give rise to germ cells/gametes." All gametes arise from primordial germ cells. The primordial germ cells are either specified autonomously by cytoplasmic determinants in the egg, or due to the interactions with neighboring cells. "Germ plasm" is the term used for all of the cytoplasmic components (proteins and mRNAs), that bring about the determination of the primordial germ cells autonomously." Germ Cell Determination in Vertebrates: Germ cell determination in various vertebrates takes place as follows: ☐ Frogs: The germ plasm of amphibians consists of germinal granules and a matrix around them; it is present at the vegetal pole of the zygote. ☐ Zebrafish: In zebrafish, the germ plasm forms a dense structure characterized by polar granules, mitochondria, and concentrated mRNAs. Later on, four clusters of PGCs are formed. ☐

Mammals: In mammals, there is no obvious germ plasm. Rather, germ cells are induced in the embryo. In mice, the germ cells form at the posterior region of the epiblast. The cells that become the PGCs in mice are not different from the other cells of the epiblast and contain no specific germ plasm. Rather, the posterior epiblast cells are induced by the extra-embryonic tissue to become PGCs. Inert Genome Hypothesis: "According to Inert Genome Hypothesis, the cells become germ cells because they are forbidden to become any other type of cell." For example, in mice, the germ cells undergo extensive chromatin modification, causing them to become transcriptionally inert at embryonic day 8.5. Germ Cell Migration in Vertebrates: Germ cell migration in vertebrates can be understood from the examples of zebrafish, frogs, mammals, birds, and reptiles. 1. Zebrafish: Zebrafish PGCs (primordial germ cells) arrive at the gonads via chemotaxis (attracted by chemical agents). Initially, PGCs are in four clusters, but

Pinkert,2012-12-02 A transgenic animal is one that is genetically modified to carry genes from another species Transgenic species can be raised to carry potentially useful genes from a variety of species While the topics of genetic engineering and cloning are controversial the reality is that these technologies offer tremendous benefits to society from offering a framework for developing and screening medical therapies to enhancing the safety and nutrition of the food we eat One potential application of research into transgenic animal technology is the creation of domestic animals genetically designed to express a certain human disease and therefore serve as models for the study and treatment of human illnesses Although many mouse models of human diseases are available today such models in large domestic animals physiologically more similar to humans are sparse and critically needed Further research in this field will undoubtedly uncover many more direct and indirect benefits of this technology Transgenic animal technologies and the ability to introduce functional genes into animals have revolutionized our ability to address complex biomedical and biological questions This well illustrated handbook covers the technical aspects of gene transfer from molecular methods to whole animal considerations for important laboratory and domestic animal species It describes methodologies as employed by leading laboratories and is a key resource for researchers as well as a tool for training technicians and students This second edition incorporates updates on a variety of
