Try to imagine a railway network that did not check its rolling stock, track, and signals whenever a failure occurred or only discovered the whereabouts of its locomotives and carriages during annual stock taking. Just imagine a railway that kept its trains waiting because there were no available locomotives. Similar thoughts could apply to any transport network of trucks, buses, or taxis covering a wide geographical area. It is quite clear that the quality of service and safety and the cost efficiency of any network depend on the effective and timely management of network resources. The same is true of telecommunications networks. For a long time now, telecommunications networks have been designed and built with remote monitoring and control devices. The very dimensions of networks and the need to intervene rapidly in the event of an incident made these devices imperative. On the other hand, the means of measuring quality of service did not appear till much later. Data transmission networks developed during the 1970s were often designed without any network management features. The technical traditions of the world of information technology had been forged on small systems with just a few dozen terminals spread over a small area. At the time, the extension of networks to cover wide geographical areas was not perceived as a change of dimension. The Practice of Management Peter Drucker, 2012-07-26. It is a valuable contribution to the study of business efficiency, which should be read by anyone wanting information about the developments and place of management, and it is as relevant today as when it was first written. It aims to be a management guide enabling readers to examine their own work and performance, to diagnose their weaknesses, and to improve their own
