

Reading Strategies

Before Reading

Predict—Check out the headings, bold fonts, and any diagrams in a chapter. Skim it and guess what the chapter may be about.

During Reading

Question—Raise questions as you read. Write down words you don't know and look them up in the dictionary. Be skeptical about an author's claims; think of yourself as an investigator. Did the author prove what he or she said? How? Did the author write something you don't understand? Can you guess what he or she meant based on the context?

Visualize—Slowly read any parts where there are phrases with sensory details, such as sight, sound, touch, smell, and taste. Give yourself a second to imagine them in your own way.

Make Connections—Consider how you relate to the text you are reading. What does it make you think about from your life, work, or other readings, films, or media?

After Reading

Summarize—Write a few sentences on what an article, chapter, or passage was about to help you remember what you read.

React—How do you interpret the material? What is your response to the text? What is left to be desired? What did it show you? What more do you know or want to know about? Do you think the author is right or wrong? Why?
