Galván-Madrid, 2012-06-08 The most massive stars in the galaxy those with more than 15 to 20 solar masses are likely to ionize their surroundings before they reach their final mass How can they accrete in spite of the presence of over pressurized gas This thesis presents results of Submillimeter Array SMA and Very Large Array VLA studies of massive star formation regions in the early stages of ionization as well as an analysis of numerical simulations of the evolution of these young HII regions The results favor a picture in which very massive stars form in accretion flows that are partially ionized and that keep accreting material from their environment
