

Relay race runners typically carry a relay baton which they must transfer between teammates. Runners have a 20 m box (usually marked with blue lines) in which to transfer the baton. The first transfer is made within the staggered lane lines; for the second and third transfers, runners typically line up across the track despite the fact that runners are usually running in line on the inside of the track. This prevents confusion and collisions during transfer. Unlike the 4 × 100 m relay, runners in the 4 × 400 typically look back and grasp the baton from the incoming runner, due to the fatigue of the incoming runner, and the wider margins allowed by the longer distance of the race. Consequently, disqualification is rare.

assessment particularly for summative purposes has increased greatly over the past thirty years. At the same time, emphasis on including all students in assessment programs has also increased. Assessment programs, whether they are large scale district based or teacher developed, have traditionally attempted to assess students using a single instrument administered to students under the same conditions. Educators and test developers, however, are increasingly acknowledging that this practice does not result in valid information inferences and decisions for all students. This problem is particularly true for students in the margins whose characteristics and needs differ from what the public thinks of as the general population of students. Increasingly, educators, educational leaders, and test developers are seeking strategies, techniques, policies, and guidelines for assessing students for whom standard assessment instruments do not function well. Whether used for high stakes decisions or classroom based formative decisions, the most critical element of any educational assessment is validity. Developing and administering assessment instruments that provide valid measures and allow for valid inferences and decisions for all groups of students presents a major challenge for today's assessment programs. Over the past few decades, several national policies have sparked research and development efforts that aim to increase test validity for students in the margins. This book explores recent developments and efforts in three important areas. The first section focuses on strategies for improving test validity through the provision of test accommodations. The second section focuses on alternate and modified assessments. Federal policies now allow testing programs to develop and administer alternate assessments for students who have not been exposed to grade level content and thus are not expected to demonstrate proficiency on grade level assessments. A separate policy allows testing programs to develop modified assessments that will provide more useful information about achievement for a small percentage of students who are exposed to grade level content but for whom the standard form of the grade level test does not provide a valid measure of achievement. These policies are complex and can be confusing for educators who are not familiar with their details. The chapters in the second section unpack these policies and explore the implications these policies have for test design. The third and final section of the book examines how principles of Universal Design can be applied to improve test validity for all students. Collectively, this volume presents a comprehensive examination of the several issues that present challenges for assessing the achievement of all students. While our understanding of how to overcome these challenges continues to evolve, the lessons, strategies, and avenues for future research explored in this book empower educators, test developers, and testing programs with a deeper understanding of how we can improve assessments for students in the margins.

Haider-Markel,2010-08-11 Out and Running is the first systematic analysis of lesbian gay bisexual and transgender LGBT political representation that explores the dynamics of state legislative campaigns and the influence of lesbian and gay legislators in the state policymaking process By examining state legislative elections from 1992 to 2006 and state policymaking from 1992 to 2009 Donald Haider Markel suggests that the LGBT community can overcome hurdles and win elections and once in office these officials can play a critical role in the policy representation of the community However he also discovers that there are limits to where and when LGBT candidates can run for office and that while their presence in office often enhances policy representation it can also create backlash But even with some of these negative consequences Out and Running provides compelling evidence that gays and lesbians are more likely to see beneficial legislation pass by increasing the number of LGBT state legislators Indeed grassroots politics in the states may allow the LGBT community its best opportunity for achieving its policy goals Copy-editing Barbara Horn,2008-12 Based on the Publishing Training Centre s distance learning course and aimed at proofreaders who want to progress to editing and editors who want to learn and improve their skills Reflects British practice and explains some of the important differences in American usage Annual Report of the Board of Railroad Commissioners for the Year Ending ... Iowa.
