Injustice in Person Rabeea Assy, 2015-06-04 In common law jurisdictions litigants are free to choose whether to procure legal representation or litigate in person There is no formal requirement that civil litigants obtain legal representation and the court has no power to impose it on them regardless of whether the litigant has the financial means to hire a lawyer or is capable of conducting litigation effectively Self representation is considered indispensable even in circumstances of extreme abuse of process such as in vexatious litigation Intriguingly although self representation is regarded as sacrosanct in common law jurisdictions most civil law systems take a diametrically opposite view and impose obligations of legal representation as a condition for conducting civil litigation except in low value claims courts or specific tribunals This disparity presents a conundrum in comparative law an unfettered freedom to proceed in person is afforded in those legal systems that are more reliant on the litigants professional skills and whose rules of procedure and evidence are more formal complex and adversarial whereas legal representation tends to be made obligatory in systems that are judge based and offer more flexible and informal procedures which would seem intuitively to be more conducive to self representation In Injustice in Person The Right to Self Representation Rabeea Assy assesses the theoretical value of self representation and challenges the conventional wisdom that this should be a fundamental right With a fresh perspective Assy develops a novel justification for mandatory legal representation exploring a number of issues such as the requirements placed by the liberal commitment to personal autonomy on the civil justice system the utility of plain English projects and the extent to which they render the law accessible to lay people and the idea that a high degree of litigant control over the proceedings enhances litigants subjective perceptions of procedural fairness On a practical level the book discusses the question of mandatory representation against the case law of English and American courts and also that of the European Court of Human Rights the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia and the Human Rights Committee

Parliament. House of Commons. Select Committee on Science and Technology,2014 Facebook s experiment with users emotions highlighted serious concerns about the extent to which ticking the terms and conditions box can be said to constitute informed consent when it comes to the varied ways data is now being used by many websites and apps Most people click yes to terms and conditions contracts without reading them because they are often laughably long and written in legalese that can be difficult to understand Socially responsible companies wouldn t want to confuse their users and should be happy to sign up to new guidelines on clear communication and informed consent A line also needs to be drawn between the information that apps actually need to provide a service and the kind of personal information they often request when registering new users information that is becoming increasingly valuable in our networked society It is vital that companies effectively communicate how they intend to use personal data collected from users of services and if terms and conditions cannot be made easier to understand then this must be explained separately This report suggests that an internationally recognised Kitemark could be the first step in ensuring the responsible use of UK citizens data The Government must also audit all public sector online services and ensure that they provide easy to understand information about their own usage of personal data The Government must learn lessons and develop a privacy impact assessment for policies that collect retain or process personal data
