Abstract

Contemporary Christian ministers and the entire Christian community are being bombarded with several Bible versions in English and other native languages without considering the implications of those translations. Previous studies relating to the significance of Bible translation are relatively scanty in the Nigerian theological research space in contrast to the vast body of translation research available in other continents such as Europe and America, which underscored the relevance of Bible translation via history, practice, criticism, theorisation, among others. This study, therefore, sets out to explore Bible translation's reasons and approaches to bring to the fore its implications in the socio-religious context. Research findings showed that the reason for translations and retranslations is based on the translators' mission of assisting humanity in understanding the truth of God's word. Society should treat Bible translations with caution and respect to understand and retain the original intention. Members of contemporary churches should work intimately with several Bible translations to enhance effective socio-religious relationships.

Background to the Study

The word translation is from the Latin word translatio, which connotes carrying over. It means a transfer, transmission, transference or transportation of phenomena from one end to the other. This implies that translation is passing information from one end (source domain) to another (target domain). That is the reason why the idea of source text and target text or first text and second text; source culture and target culture; source language and target language, and source extract and target extract, among others, is fundamental to translation. Translation is therefore "the process and the product of all forms of transfer of written, spoken or signed texts originating in one language (the source language) into texts that resemble them in some ways in another (the target language)."<sup>1</sup>

Historically, the origin of translation can be traced to the confusion in Babel of the language community in the biblical representation of the world of man as a monolingual society. Before then, the whole world existed with one language. The monolithic language tendency prompted them to agree on building a tower that could reach heaven. Gen. 11:1-4 NIV records:

Now the whole world had one language and a common speech. 2 As men moved eastward, they found a plain in Shinar and settled there. 3 They said to each other, "Come, let's make bricks and bake them thoroughly." They used brick instead of stone, and tar for mortar. 4 Then they said, "Come, let us build ourselves a city, with a tower that reaches to the heavens, so that we may make a name for ourselves and not be scattered over the face of the whole earth."
