Meat Animals Growth And Productivity:

Meat Animals D. Lister, 2012-12-06 Dramatic shortfalls in crop production in various regions of the world have led some people to question the relatively inefficient use of cereal grains for feeding meat animals instead of their direct use for human food. There is no doubt, however, that meat offers a nutritionally valuable, attractive and widely accepted food, the world demand for which increases daily. Thus it is not enough simply to condemn the consumption of meat as an irresponsible extravagance; rather it is preferable to examine how the demand for meat can be met most efficiently and effectively, which requires a fundamental enquiry into how meat is grown. The importance of fat, for instance, both to the growing animal and to the consumer, needs to be established in view of the expense involved in its deposition by the animal and the extent to which it is discarded at many points in the chain from the slaughterhouse to the consumer. We were aware that there existed a wealth of information on the physiology of growth, which because of its having been collected as part of investigations in many other disciplines and the inevitable communication gap had not been incorporated into the science of animal production. Similarly, there were principles and techniques of animal husbandry which, if known in other disciplines, might enable more pertinent questions to be asked. The biochemical and physiological pathways by which animals utilise feed to produce body protein, fat and other components are intriguing problems which are receiving considerable attention. Meat Animals: Growth and Productivity Growth and Productivity of Meat Animals: Symposium, NATO., 1976 Principles of Animal Growth and Development David E. Gerrard, Alan L. Grant, 2003 Animal and Plant Productivity Robert J. Dahl,2025-08-19 Equip Strengthening smallholder livestock systems for the future a project that is at the feed the future innovation lab for livestock systems aims to improve livestock productivity by improving the supply of quality feed to dairy cows in Ethiopia and sheep and goats in Burkina Faso This is achieved though interconnected activities that involve inventory of feed resources using landscape analysis testing improving yield quality and preservation of forages determining and meeting nutrient requirement of local dairy and sheep and goat breeds improving the capacity to analyze nutritional value of livestock feed using NIRS ILRI and examining Effects of Synergizing

Feed Management and Genetic Interventions on Milk Production and Health of Dairy Cows Project activities have been implemented since 2018 and most of the components have generated data or evidence that has mostly been analyzed and is now ready for publication. In 2019 studies that mostly focus on forages have been published in special issue at the Agronomy journal. There are other studies that have results but not yet published. These include agronomic testing of improved forages mainly from Ethiopia, the use of improved forage or preserved forage to improve animal productivity, estimating and testing nutrient requirement of local animal breeds. The purpose of this proposed special issue is to share the results of the EQUIP FEED project with a wider academic research and development community and stakeholders that focus on improvement of animal productivity in developing countries.
