The G20 in nutshell

The G20, or Group of 20, is an international forum comprising the world's major developed and developing economies. It represents approximately 85 percent of the global Gross Domestic Product (GDP), over 75 percent of worldwide trade, and encompasses about two-thirds of the global population. The G20 holds annual Summits, hosted by a rotating member country. Before these Summits, meetings on various topics such as trade, health, and tourism are conducted in that host country in the preceding months.

The culmination of the G20, which took place over two days in New Delhi, India, marks a significant moment in global economic discourse. This international assembly brings together the foremost economies of the world, providing a platform for deliberations on the most pressing challenges confronting the global economic landscape. For India, hosting this summit in 2023 is not only an occasion to display its economic and political influence on the global stage but also an opportunity to engage in substantive discussions with fellow G20 nations on critical issues ranging from climate change to sustainable development and global health.

The G20, formally known as the Group of Twenty, emerged in 1999 in the aftermath of the Asian financial crisis, coalescing around vital concerns including international financial stability, climate action, and sustainable progress. Comprising 19 nations and the European Union, this intergovernmental forum commands a staggering 80 trillion dollars of the global Gross Domestic Product (GDP), accounts for 75 trillion dollars in international trade, encompasses two-thirds of the world's population, and occupies 60 million square miles of the Earth's landmass. This commanding presence solidifies the G20's standing as a preeminent forum for international collaboration in economic and financial spheres.

The G20 membership encompasses nations such as Argentina, Australia, Brazil, Canada, China, France, Germany, India, Indonesia, Italy, Japan, Republic of Korea, Mexico, Russia, Saudi Arabia, South Africa, Turkey, the United Kingdom, and the United States, in addition to the European Union. Beyond this core roster, the conference has to leaders from non-member states and a diverse array of international organizations. With Narendra Modi's inclusive approach, the African Union has been welcomed into this fold, signaling India's intent to broaden the forum's reach. Moreover, in collaboration with Germany, India is
