

ECON 1000 – Contemporary Economic Issues “The Distribution Function of Government”

Relevant Readings from the Required Textbooks:

- Chapter 12, Inequality and Redistribution
- Chapter 13, Assessing Taxation Outcomes

Definitions and Concepts:

- distribution function – government policies aimed at changing the final distribution of goods/services across consumers, usually with the intention of realizing a “fairer” apportionment of consumption/income/wealth.
- redistribution – government policies designed to alter the distribution of income/wealth/consumption across members of society.
- income – the flow of money earned by an individual during a period of time.
- wealth – the current stock of money (and other valuable assets) that an individual owns at a point in time.
- income support – monetary payments (such as unemployment benefits and social security payments) made to certain individuals, which directly alter the distribution of income within a society.
- redistribution in-kind – public provision of goods/services (such as healthcare, education, housing, food) for certain individuals, which alter the consumption of goods/services within society.
- poverty – the condition of having very limited access to goods and services.
- poverty thresholds – income levels (based upon the number of and ages of individuals in a household) below which a household is deemed to be living in poverty.
- poverty rate – the percentage of the population that is living in poverty.
- time price (of a good) – the amount of time a person has to work to earn enough money to buy something, computed as monetary price divided by monetary hourly wage rate
- 7 Determinants of Productivity, Income, and Wealth:
 1. natural talent and ability – ability is not distributed equally at birth; some people possess attributes (e.g., intelligence, strength) that make them more productive
 2. Acquired Skills – individual productivity depends in large part upon skills and experiences acquired during education, training, and work experience
 3. Effort – productivity is often largely dependent upon effort (“workers” are more productive than “shirkers”)
 4. Compensating Differentials – differences in wage rates that are due to differences in working conditions (e.g., risky jobs pay more, “glamour jobs” pay less)
 5. Inherited Wealth – wealth is distributed less evenly than income (due partly to differences in inheritances)
