HISTORY AND CULTURAL IDENTITY: THE PHILIPPINE

CASE Rolando M. Gripaldo, Ph.D.

De La Salle University, Manila

Cultural identity evolves with historical development. Sometimes the evolution is so slow that the cultural identity of a community is identified as virtually the same as that of centuries ago. This is usually the case for primitive ethnic or tribal identities. In another case, the evolution is fast compared with the first case such that the cultural identity of a community contains many foreign cultural elements although it is still identified with many important ethnic cultural traits. In the third scenario, the evolution is much faster than the second case such that the cultural identity of the group assumes most of the foreign cultural traits, usually those brought about by Westernization. In the last scenario, the evolution is fastest such that the cultural identity of the community is very similar to the Western cultural identity although slight vestiges of its ethnic or racial origin may still be noticeable. The Philippine case belongs to the fourth scenario and the purpose of the paper is to philosophically explain how such a scenario comes about.

Certainly, the current usage of the term “cultural identity” is contextual and will have different meanings in different contexts. This is especially true when one migrates to another country and, depending upon the context, he or she will be culturally identified as of ethnic, racial, national, etc., identity.

This paper will argue that Filipino cultural identity is still something in the making within the greater purview of the Western culture—a positive cultural identity which Filipinos can be proud of and which foreigners can affirm in a favorable light.
