

LEARNING, MEMORY AND REPRESENTATION

- A cognitive system interacts with the environment in two main ways:
- Perception: Transforms things in the environment to internal representations. (Environment - Cognitive system)
- Actions: Turns desires to act into physical changes in the environment. (Cognitive system - Environment)

- For animals the cognitive system is usually implemented in the brain, the senses are used for perception to take in information from the environment and the body is used to perform actions which affect the environment.

- For robots the cognitive system is implemented in the , the sensors are used for perception to take in information from the environment and the actuators are used to perform actions.

- Disembodied software is software where the body does not really matter(example: google docs, amazon.com recommender system).
- Amazon.com recommender system:
- Perception: Updating database from user selecting products they like.
- Actions: Displays to screen

- In a distributed cognitive system, cognition is distributed across several things. The cognitive entity working on the project is a combination of all the people involved and all the artifacts they are using. The artifacts(example: paper, calculator, spreadsheets, whiteboard, computers) serve as external memory. They also work in an environment. The artifacts may also perform processing which is doing some of the cognitive load. They are variety of sensory organs and actuators or software effects in a distributed cognitive system.

- Cognition is a manipulation of representations. A representation is something that is used in place of the real thing.
- Representations are stored in memory:
- Animal: Brain, Long term memory, Short term memory
- Software: Databases, symbols
- Distributed system: Paper, brain, disk, environment manipulation

- Human Memory of Facts and Perceptions(not skills):
- Sensory memory: very short and uninterpreted, rewritten every couple of seconds, like a scratch pad for vision and a bit of recording tape for hearing.
