

Mobilization

Students read a 2 page texts and complete a chart.

Two sample pages from a textbook are shown, illustrating the mobilization efforts during World War I. The pages are titled "Mobilizing for World War I: The Homefront" and "Rallying the Country".

Mobilizing for World War I: The Homefront

Directions: Carefully read the following passage about how the United States mobilized for War I. Describe these efforts on the chart.

World War I was a total war. In previous wars, the civilian population avoided the war effort. Men were placed in uniform for food and clothing, and since the 19th century, weapons were crafted by the army from the general population. But modern combat required more food and industrial goods than ever before. New weapons technology required more fuel and industrial goods than ever before. The economic needs of 20th-century warfare dwarfed earlier wars. Therefore, mobilizing every citizen was essential. Without the support of the whole population, future wars could not be won. Governments used every new communication technology to spread pro-war propaganda. American efforts to win World War I amounted to nothing less than a national machine.

Rallying the Country

Congress declared war. President Wilson quickly created the Committee on Public Information under the direction of George Creel. Creel used every possible medium to inspire popular sentiment. Creel organized rallies and parades. He commissioned composers to write patriotic songs intended to stir the nation's emotions. Indeed, "Over There" became an overnight success story of mobilizing Americans to do everything they could to win the war. Creel depicted a serious-looking young American man, looking "I want this for the boys." Creel's posters were everywhere. An army of "I Want This for the Boys" posters was created. Films and songs were created.

Supporting a Wartime Economy

One of the first actions was to raise an army with the Selective Service Act. This act called a national draft to support the war effort and answer the need for men in uniform. The act required a national draft to support the war effort and answer the need for men in uniform.

How did the U.S. prepare and support the war effort?

How did they?	Government Actions
How did they?	Selective Service Act
How did they?	War Bonds
How did they?	New Taxes
How did they?	War Industries Board

Key terms are highlighted to guide notes.
