

Verbal communicative behaviour

Verbal communicative behaviour is one of two major communication code systems, associated with the transmission of messages using spoken words typically labelled as "language". Taking into consideration that man shows his or her personality and temper while speaking, in the artistic work it can be achieved by means of character's speech, it being deeply individualized, with all the words, expressions, figures of speech and expressiveness.

"Personality" is usually understood as the expression of oneself, that what makes one man different from another. This notion is commonly used to refer to someone's uniqueness, including his or her individual traits, feelings, position in life and goals. We express ourselves by our clothes, appearance, behaviour, by every act and movement, but most of all we express ourselves by what we say and the way we say it, since any personality displays itself and his or her essence through subjective activity and communication, which is impossible without language and speaking.

No other personality factor counts so much for or against us as does our speech, because it reflects person's social experience, status (age, education, profession, place of residence, etc.) individual way of thinking, intellect, inner condition, attitude to life. Thus it is obvious that nobody can be understood beyond his or her speech, because it is difficult to make any suggestions about a certain man without hearing what and how he speaks.

In academic research the term "type" or "personality" is defined as "figure-personage with peculiar traits of character, own way of thinking, distinctive outlook and who is absolutely individual and unique" [1; p.689].

Accordingly, "speech personality" of a personage is defined as "a particular selection of linguo-expressive units: words, expressions, syntax which reflect both significant traits of personage's speech of a certain social domain he belongs to and his individual character" [2; p.12]. Thus linguistic typification is a process of selecting expressive linguistic units which characterize significant traits of the personage's speech.

In the 19th century characters' direct speech was singled out from author's narration. It became the particular literary tool of introducing various speech norms like literary, dialectical and others. In such way general evolution of character's speech was developing through its individualization aimed at depicting character's "linguo-stylistic repertoire", taking into consideration a variety of sociolinguistic factors [3; p.40].

According to N.D. Anutyunova lexicon of inner world is a result of verbal work [4; p.7]. If we pay attention to the work of literature we can see that author reflects both reality and spiritual life of the character. Consequently, V.P. Belyanin suggests that in the writer we should recognize not only a narrator, but also a psychologist, interpreter of other people's behaviour according to his own moral values [5; p.20].

The authors try not to describe the speech of their characters, but render it in form close to spoken language. Every literary character as well as ordinary man has his or her personal-social behaviour, and individual speech peculiarities of this character are connected with his or her social status, gender, age, physical state, temper, intellect, level of education,
