

MANAGERIAL ECONOMICS

Definition

Success in the management of the profit and non-profit organization like firms and hospitals, no matter how you slice it, can hardly be possible without a clear understanding of economic forces, how economic forces operate, how economic forces affect organizations, economic consequences of managerial decision and thorough understanding of the economic environment in which organizations operate. These factors determine the demand for the products, the inputs requirements, the price of product, the cost of production of outputs, the number of rival firms, the nature of pricing strategies, method of distribution, the profitability of the investment etc. Managerial economics describes how economic forces affect and are affected by managerial decisions. It, also, deals with application of economic theories to achieve managerial objectives.

For us to understand the concept managerial economics very well let us take each of its words one by one and explain.

The Manager

A manager is a person who directs resources to achieve a stated goal. This definition includes all individuals who (1) direct the efforts of others, including those who delegate tasks within an organization such as a firm, a family or a club. (2) Purchase or hire inputs to be used in production of goods and services (3) are in charge of making other decisions, such as production, product price or quality, etc.

A manager generally has responsibility for his or her actions as well as for the action of individuals, machines and other inputs under manager's control.

Economics

Economics deals with how people- individuals, households, firms and nation maximizes their gains from their limited resources and opportunities. In economics terminology, this is called maximizing behavior or more appropriately
