

Our tendency to attribute our behavior to our context or to blame others for it is directly in contrast to how we tend to judge others' actions. When it comes to other people, we are far more likely to attribute the bad meal to their inability to cook rather than to other causes. This is called the fundamental attribution error.

SUGGESTION

HELP needed Systems-Centered Training Yvonne M. Agazarian, Susan P. Gantt, Frances B. Carter, 2020-12-30 This illustrated book shows how thinking systems offer new ways of seeing people which can help us see and do things differently. The authors describe how a theory of living human systems was developed and even recently revised. This major revision led to a theory of the person as a system and its role systems map that helps us see which system in us and in others is running the show. The authors illustrate how life force energy fuels the hierarchy of living human systems and how theory and practice with role systems can be useful in everyday life. They begin with describing how they have used the new illustrations as a map to locate the contexts of our roles. Using this map has also enabled the authors to identify the role systems and explore the territory of ourselves and our groups in new ways that deepened our understanding of roles and role locks. This book illustrates systems centered therapy and training SCT theory by offering a practical theory to guide group psychotherapists, leaders and consultants in working with group dynamics.

The Post-Racial Limits of Memorialization Alfred Frankowski, 2015-11-09 The Post Racial Limits of Memorialization Toward a Political Sense of Mourning attempts to show how post racial discourse in general and post racial memory specifically operates as a context through which the memorialization of anti black violence and the production of new forms of this violence are connected. Alfred Frankowski argues that aside from being symbolically meaningful the post racial context requires that memorialization of anti black violence in the past produces memory as a type of forgetting. By challenging many of the tenants of the critical turn in political philosophy and aesthetics he argues against a politics of reconciliation and for a political sense of mourning that amplifies the universality of violence embedded in our contemporary sensibility. He argues for a sense of mourning that requires that we deepen our understanding of how remembrance and resistance to oppression remain linked and necessitates a fluid and active reconfiguration relative to the context in which this oppression exists.

Indigenous Engineering for an Enduring Culture Cat Kutay, Elyssebeth Leigh, Juliana Kaya Prpic, Lyndon Ormond-Parker, 2022-09-28 For many millennia Indigenous Australians have been engineering the landscape using sophisticated technological and philosophical knowledge systems in a deliberate response to changing social and environmental circumstances. These knowledge systems integrate profound understanding of country and bring together knowledge of the topography and geology of the landscape, its natural cycles and ecological systems, its hydrological systems and natural resources including fauna and flora. This enables people to manage resources sustainably and reliably and testifies to a developed contextualised knowledge system and to a society with agency and the capability to maintain and refine accumulated knowledge and material processes. This book is a recognition and acknowledgement of the ingenuity of Indigenous engineering which is grounded in philosophical principles, values and practices that emphasise sustainability, reciprocity, respect and diversity and often presents a much needed challenge to a Western engineering worldview. Each chapter is written by a team of authors combining Indigenous knowledge, skills and academic expertise, providing examples of collaboration at the intersection of Western and Indigenous engineering.
