Immunohematology W. John Judd, 1994 Current Developments in Anthropological Genetics Michael

Crawford, 2012-12-06 While the previous two volumes in this series were based upon methodology theory and the relationship between ecology and population structure this book can be viewed as an in depth case study The population genetics of a multitude of diverse groups geographically distributed throughout the world was examined in the first two volumes In contrast this volume focuses upon a single ethnic group the Black Caribs Garifuna of Central America and St Vincent Island and explores the interrelationships among the ethnohistory sociocultural characteristics demography morphology and genetic structure of the group This volume offers a broad and intensive treatment of the Black Caribs and their interactions with surrounding populations My interest in the genetics of the Black Caribs was sparked by an accidental meeting in Amsterdam Holland in March 1975 A conversation with Nancie Gonzalez at the Applied Anthropology Meetings revealed the truth is stranger than fiction history of the Black Carib peoples of the Caribbean This was a population with a small sized founding group and a unique biological success story Nancie Gonzalez was particularly interested in estimating the Carib Indian admixture in the contemporary Garifuna population Given my previous experience in estimating Spanish and African admixture in the Tlaxcaltecan population whose gene pool consisted predominantly of Indian alleles a group that appeared to be primarily African with some Indian admixture was of great interest Aside from the ethnohistorical interest I believe that such a population may add considerably to our understanding of the inheritance of complex morphological traits

tumor marker relationships The purpose of this review is to provide an update of progress realized in these areas Other reviews with emphasis 12 15 on special areas are also available Current and prospective experimental studies should be of use in regard to the following questions 1

Antibodies David Catty, 1988 This book is the second of a two volume series covering the production of antibodies and their major applications Volume I concentrates on how to raise monoclonal and polyclonal antibodies and how to use them in a set of universally applied tests Now Volume II extends this repertoire of antibody applications with detailed accounts of important labelled antibody techniques using radioisotopes fluorochromes and enzymes along with descriptions of red cell and tissue typing Specific techniques described here include assays with radiolabels ELISA and related enzyme immunoassays immunoperoxidase methods immunofluorescence fluorescence activated cell sorting tumor immunodetection blood group serology and HLA serology The volume will be invaluable for any researcher interested in making greater use of antibodies as research tools or in updating their present methodology The detail given is sufficient to enable immediate use of the protocols

Methods in Neurobiology Robert Lahue, 2013-11-21 Rapid advances in knowledge have led to an increasing interest in neuro biology over the last several years These advances have been made possible at least in part by the use of increasingly sophisticated methodology Furthermore research in the most rapidly advancing areas is essentially multidisciplinary and is characterized by contributions from many investigators employing a variety of techniques While a grasp of fundamental neurobiological concepts is an obvious prerequisite for those who wish to follow or participate in this field critical awareness and evaluation of neurobiological research also requires an understanding of sophisticated methodologies The objective of Methods in Neurobiology is the development of such critical abilities The reader is exposed to the basic concepts principles and instrumentation of key methodologies and the application of each methodology is placed in the special context of neurobiological research The reader will gain familiarity with the terminology and procedures of each method and the ability to evaluate results in light of the particular features of neurobiological preparations and applications

Biochemistry of Antibodies R. Nezlin, 2012-12-06 When the history of immunology in the twentieth century is written the decade of the 1960 s will in all probability stand out as the period of greatest advance in the development of molecular immunology It is appropriate and useful therefore that a scholarly and integrated presentation of this progress should be made available in English The translation of Dr Nezlin's Biochemistry of Antibodies from Russian admirably fulfills this need in the form of a scientific monograph directed to medical and biological scientists The appearance of this monograph also serves to emphasize the conceptual unification of diverse immunological phenomena which has emerged from progress in molecular immunology This unity is a consequence of the key role played by the antibody molecule either in solution or cell bound in every biological process properly described as immunological Indeed immunology as an independent natural science can be described as the study of the structure interactions and biosynthesis of the antibody molecule
