

Amitai Etzioni has devoted a lifetime of study to the question of what makes a good society, and his work as the founder of the communitarian movement attests to his influence in moving the public debate away from a preoccupation with rights to a balance between individual rights and social responsibilities. The New Golden Rule invites us to examine how a communitarian society, one in which order is largely based on moral commitments rather than on law, should operate in practice—and what values we must bring to our social interactions if we are to achieve stronger and more enduring ties.

PRAISE FOR THE NEW GOLDEN RULE

"Etzioni's call to moderation and what used to be called 'common sense' is welcome amidst the shouting and clamor of the present. He understands that American democracy involves a commitment to individuals and to communities; to liberty and to order. If we lose one side of the ledger, the other falters as well."

—JEAN BETHKE ELSHTAIN

"The New Golden Rule . . . is a serious effort to map out a strategy for 'remoralizing' contemporary societies without abandoning their liberal framework, written in a manner accessible to anyone interested in the 'sociology of virtue.'"

—FRANCIS FUKUYAMA

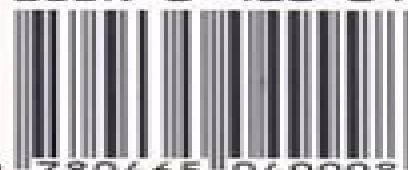

AMITAI ETZIONI is University Professor at George Washington University and the author of fourteen books on social policy and ethics, including The Spirit of Community and The Moral Dimension. He is the founding president of the Communitarian Network, the editor of The Responsive Community, and a former president of the American Sociological Association. He lives in Washington, D.C.
