

Moral Education

Key points:

- There are crucial emotions at play in the moral domain. We need to nurture empathy. How do we compensate for damaged attachment?
- Morality arises from day to day social interactions
- These interactions arouse emotions
- By reflecting on and modulating these feelings moral values develop
- Because of this, attempts to artificially impose moral values create a very ephemeral morality (e.g. through conditioning)
- The medium will therefore very much become the message. How you teach will communicate as much as what you teach
- So there has to be a congruence between content and practice
- There may be a cognitive dimension to moral development – movement from concrete to abstract. from obedience to autonomy
- According to Damon moral development is best nurtured in a controlled democratic environment
