

HE WHAKAMATAUTAU

*An interview with Ranginui Walker
by Jacqueline Amoamo*

One Tuesday lunchtime I was coming back through Albert Park from the university where I had been to pick up Rangi Walker's 'Korero' column. We had this 50/50 arrangement – he'd deliver it to the Listener office in High Street or I would go up through the park to the staff common room, have lunch and a korero with whoever of Rangi's colleagues were around at the time. Then the brown envelope would change hands and back down to the flatlands of crass commercialism I'd trot. I called myself the 'Korero' courier. This has been the routine for years.

On this particular Tuesday I met a friend who asked where I'd been. Up to get 'Korero', I explained. With a slight shudder she asked, 'Aren't you terrified of him? He's so forbidding and bitter.' Over the years I'd discovered this to be a widespread Pakeha view of Dr Rangi Walker. To them he had taken on the role of professional goad, predictable dissenter from the Pakeha view of New Zealand, as well as apologist-in-chief for the Maori viewpoint. They turned on the radio or TV or opened the Listener and there he was again, rubbishing the Pakeha. Even when they agreed privately with what he had to say, the persistent counter-analysis of colonial history and current events seemed to get under the Pakeha skin of even quite reasonable people. He was generally an uncomfortable presence.

But it was always hard for me, another Pakeha, to feel threatened by the Walker view of New Zealand – even back in 1975 when I first began to sub the 'Korero' column. A curious double

Decolonising Political Concepts Valentin Clavé-Mercier, Marie Wuth, 2023-10-24 This book presents a transdisciplinary and transnational challenge to the enduring coloniality of political concepts discussing the need to decolonise both their theoretical constructions as well as their substantive translations into practices Despite the acclaimed twentieth century decolonisation waves coloniality still remains in subtle and obvious practices in visible and invisible mechanisms of power and in the privileging of certain knowledges and the dismissing of others Decolonising Political Concepts critically addresses the role political concepts play in the continuing legacies of colonialism and ongoing coloniality This book building on postcolonial and decolonial thinkers and ideas demonstrates how concepts may be used as oppressing political and epistemological tools By presenting efforts to decolonise political concepts the book signals the potential for genuinely postcolonial academic and political contexts Bringing together scholars from different disciplines and engaging with a wide array of geographical contexts the chapters examine concepts such as agency violence freedom or sovereignty This book enables readers to critically engage with concepts used in political discourse and allows them to reflect on their impact and alternatives It will appeal to graduate students and scholars from international relations social sciences or philosophy as well as to socio political actors engaged in decolonisation agendas The Open Access version of this book available at <http://www.taylorfrancis.com> has been made available under a Creative Commons Attribution Non Commercial No Derivatives CC BY NC ND 4.0 license

New Zealand And The World: Past, Present And Future Robert G Patman, Iati

Iati,Balazs Kiglics,2017-12-28 The aim of this book is to provide the reader with an overview of New Zealand's international relations. It is a country that has often shown an international presence that is out of proportion to the modest spectrum of national economic, military and diplomatic capabilities at its disposal. In this volume, the editors have called upon a range of specialists representing a range of views drawn from the worlds of academia, policy making and civil society. It is an attempt to present a rounded picture of New Zealand's place in the world, one that does not rely exclusively on any particular perspective. The book does not claim to be exhaustive. But it does seek to present a more wide-ranging treatment of New Zealand's foreign relations than has generally been the case in the past. Five broad themes help shape and organize the contributions to the text.

There are also long entries discussing the literatures and histories of those further areas that have also claimed the title postcolonial, notably Britain, East Asia, Ireland, Latin America and the United States. The Companion contains 220 entries written by 150 acknowledged scholars of postcolonial history and literature, covers major events, ideas, movements and figures in postcolonial histories, long regional survey essays on historiography and women's histories. Extensive cross-references and indexes enable readers to locate particular literary texts in their relevant historical contexts, as well as to discover related literary texts and histories in other regions with ease.
