The Inhabitable Flesh of Architecture Professor Marcos Cruz, 2013-12-31 Today's architecture has failed the body with its long heritage of purity of form and aesthetic of cleanliness. A resurgence of interest in flesh especially in art has led to a politics of abjection completely changing traditional aesthetics and is now giving light to an alternative discussion about the body in architecture. Established over 30 years ago it has won numerous awards including the Stirling Prize. Through the contributions of journalists, clients, fellow professionals and academics this AD issue celebrates the practice's achievements in all areas of architectural production featuring archive material, new works and unparalleled access to the AHMM organisation revealing new insights into their work and urban philosophies. To get to this eminent position the office has consistently responded in innovative and imaginative ways to the changing imperatives of art, science and economics that influence our built environment. These parameters have metamorphosed considerably since AHMM was founded in terms of advances in digitisation, material science and changes to contract management, what constitutes sustainability, procurement routes, construction methods, collaboration and architectural education. Above all this AD will explore AHMM's practice as a holistic design project in itself in terms of building buildings but also in using a design ethos to cope with shifts in workload and the firm's varying business activities and its administration over the years, thus providing insight for a future generation of potentially successful architectural professionals.
