

RELIGION AFTER FORTY

JOHN CHARLES COOPER

John C. Cooper writes: "This is a book about people of my own generation, born 1890 and thereafter, who have reached the age of 40. Dr. Cooper starts with the youthful crisis of faith many of us have faced and moves on to the more deep-seated crisis of spirituality through which many of us are now passing. The people of his book are real, persons drawn from the daily life of a pastor-professor-writer, who spends his days in touch with life, learning from it. The people he discusses are real citizens, contributing members of society because of their age, education, experience and social position. Yet like the more publicized youth generation, his generation has its problems and problems too.

Dr. Cooper examines the intolerance in Christian and other popular literature that stresses youth involvement
