Summary and Keywords

In the second half of the 20th century, theories on secularization and secularism have been dominated by three approaches: secularization theory, individualization theory, and market theory. In the new millennium, approaches that both built on and revised these neoclassical approaches emerged: deprivation and insecurity theory, the theory of secular transition and intergenerational decline, theories of religious–secular competition, and theories focusing on the tipping point of the 1960s. These four new approaches have deepened our understanding of secularization, secularity, and secularism; however, they each have their own theoretical and empirical problems that need to be addressed by future research.

It has become customary in sociology and the political sciences to distinguish three large types of macro-theory on secularization, secularity, and secularism, namely secularization theory, individualization theory, and market theory. Each of these types includes a large number of approaches, ideas, and research endeavors. These neoclassical theories were formulated in the last millennium and have been described, discussed, and criticized many times since. A brief overview of the three neoclassical theories is provided, but then four theoretical approaches are focused on that have been developed in the new millennium: deprivation and insecurity theory, the theory of secular transition and intergenerational decline, theories of religious–secular competition, and theories focusing on the tipping point of the 1960s. These approaches are in the process of being discussed and tested thoroughly.

Keywords: secularization, secularity, secularism, modernization, religious–secular competition, macro-theory, politics and religion intense controversy about secularism This controversy has intensified due to the presence of fundamentalism which challenges secular society and the secularization of philosophical ideas and ethical values Secularists maintain that the state should not impose a religious creed upon citizens and should respect freedom of conscience the right to believe or disbelieve in the prevailing orthodoxy This right is guaranteed by the First Amendment to the US Constitution and the Rights of Man enunciated in the French Revolution Yet many powerful religious institutions do not accept this principle Paul Kurtz argues that secularism needs to be allied to the emergence of democratic institutions that respect individual freedom and the pluralistic society He argues that a defense of secularism entails a defense of the civic virtues of democracy which include the toleration of dissent and alternative lifestyles and the willingness to negotiate differences Consequently secularism will take different forms in different societies the term multi secularism best describes that Many people believe that it is impossible to maintain a moral order without the support of religion Kurtz vigorously denies that and this volume attempts to explicate the values and principles of secular morality which he sees as the cornerstone of the open democratic society Kurtz was involved in the campaign for secularism throughout his career as a philosopher This book reflects his participation in this battle and extends his thinking to new areas
