Earth Overcoming this crisis is not a matter of technology Technological strategies need to be adopted to mitigate human impact on Earth but as long as they are implemented on a capitalist basis the crisis will not be overcome Unfortunately this is not fully understood today and initiatives to confront the crisis based on idealism and positivism flourish everywhere This makes research into the main epistemological reasons for the misunderstanding of the relationship between the reproduction of capital and the crisis of habitability an urgent task which is undertaken throughout the book Such misunderstanding is ultimately related to the old problem of philosophy the relationship between thought and being A problem that the crisis of habitability expresses as the insurmountable contradiction between capitalist humans and nature
