Prediabetes Alert: Are Your Heart and Kidneys at Risk?

Recent evidence suggests greater odds of cardiovascular and renal complications with elevated blood sugar below the diabetes threshold.

People with type 2 diabetes are twice as likely as those without the disease to develop and die from cardiovascular disease, according to the American Heart Association.

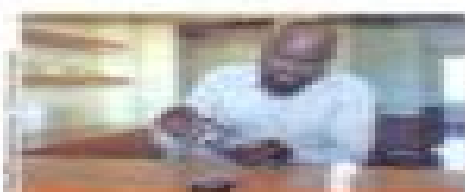

Now, emerging research indicates that your odds of developing cardiovascular disease, kidney problems and other complications may be heightened if you have prediabetes, or elevated blood sugar. Although data suggest that death rates associated with type 2 diabetes have almost doubled in 10 American men, many have prediabetes, and many do not realize it.

"We know there is a higher risk of complications even from prediabetes," explains Rahul Patel, MD, a Cleveland Clinic endocrinologist. "When you have prediabetes, now is the time to make the type of lifestyle changes to prevent things from getting worse and further increasing those risks."

Concerning Findings

Having prediabetes means your hemoglobin A1c is between 5.7% and 6.4%. A1c is a measure of blood-sugar levels over the previous three months or other blood-sugar values are elevated but have not reached the level of type 2 diabetes.

Recently, researchers analyzing data on 336,708 people reported that prediabetes was independently associated with a greater risk of cardiovascular disease (ASCVD) and chronic kidney disease (CKD). During a median follow-up period of just over 15 years, nearly 18% of the study participants with prediabetes developed ASCVD, CKD or heart failure, of whom only about 12% progressed to type 2 diabetes, the study found. Compared with an A1c below 5.6%, the risk of ASCVD increased significantly at an A1c level above 5.6%, whereas CKD risk rose at an A1c above 6.2%. The study authors published findings in the American College of Cardiology, Aug. 3, 2021.

In an analysis of 3,673 middle-aged adults with no history of cardiovascular disease or type 2 diabetes, researchers noted that the presence of subclinical ASCVD was significantly greater in people with prediabetes and was elevated even at A1c levels below the prediabetes cutoff (5.6% to 6.4%) in people otherwise considered to be at low cardiovascular risk (Journal of the American College of Cardiology, June 8, 2021). "Even in the pre-diabetic or borderline prediabetic range, you're already starting to see some plaques building in the arteries," Dr. Patel notes.
