history of home care from its nineteenth century origins in organized visiting nurses associations through a time when professional home care nearly disappeared on to the 1960s when a new wave of home care gathered force as physicians hospital managers and policy makers responded to economic mandates Buhler Wilkerson links local ideas about the formation and function of home based services to national events and health care agendas and she gives special attention to care of the dangerous sick particularly poor immigrants with infectious diseases and the uninteresting sick those with chronic illnesses     Western Hospital Review ,1928     Wartime Health and Education United States.
