Painful Dilemma Patients In Pain People In Prison:

The Neural Underpinnings of Vicarious Experience Bernadette M. Fitzgibbon, Jamie Ward, 2014-08-27 Everyday we vicariously experience a range of states that we observe in other people we may feel embarrassed when witnessing another making a social faux pas or we may feel sadness when we see a loved one upset In some cases this process appears to be implicit For instance observing pain in others may activate pain related neural processes but without generating an overt feeling of pain In other cases people report a more literal conscious sharing of affective or somatic states and this has sometimes been described as representing an extreme form of empathy By contrast there appear to be some people who are limited in their ability to vicariously experience the states of others This may be the case in several psychiatric neurodevelopmental and personality disorders where deficits in interpersonal understanding are observed such as schizophrenia autism and psychopathy In recent decades neuroscientists have paid significant attention to the understanding of the social brain and the way in which neural processes govern our understanding of other people In this Research Topic we wish to contribute towards this understanding and ask for the submission of manuscripts focusing broadly on the neural underpinnings of vicarious experience This may include theoretical discussion case studies and empirical investigation using behavioural techniques electrophysiology brain stimulation and neuroimaging in both healthy and clinical populations Of specific interest will be the neural correlates of individual differences in traits such as empathy how we distinguish between ourselves and other people and the sensorimotor resonant mechanisms that may allow us to put ourselves in another's shoes

Empathy and Fairness Gregory R. Bock, Jamie A. Goode, 2007-01-11 Empathy is the process that allows us to share the feelings and emotions of others in the absence of any direct emotional stimulation to the self Humans can feel empathy for other people in a wide array of contexts for basic emotions and sensation such as anger fear sadness joy pain and lust as well as for more complex emotions such as guilt embarrassment and love It has been proposed that for most people empathy is the process that prevents us doing harm to others Although empathy seems to be an automatic response of the brain to others emotional reactions there are circumstances under which we do not share the same feeling as others Imagine for example that someone who does the same job as you is paid twice as much In this case that person might be very satisfied with their extra salary but you would not share this satisfaction This case illustrates the ubiquitous feeling of fairness and justice Our sense of fairness has also become the focus of modern economic theories In contrast to the prominent self interest hypothesis of classic economy assuming that all people are exclusively motivated by their self interest humans are also strongly motivated by other regarding preferences such as the concern for fairness and reciprocity The notion of fairness is not only crucial in personal interaction with others in the context of families workplace or interactions with strangers but also guides people s behaviour in impersonal economic and political domains This book brings together work from a wide range of disciplines to explain processes underlying empathy and fairness The expert contributors approach the topic of empathy and fairness from different viewpoints namely those of social cognitive neuroscience developmental psychology evolutionary anthropology economics and neuropathology The result is an interdisciplinary and unitary framework focused on the neuronal developmental evolutionary and psychological basis of empathy and fairness With its extensive discussions and the high calibre of the participants this important new book is essential reading for anyone with an interest in this topic
