

Step-by-Step Guide to Performing CPR on Infants

PREPARING TO PERFORM CPR ON AN INFANT

Once you've determined that an infant is unresponsive and requires CPR, the first critical step is proper positioning. Lie the infant down on their back on top of a firm, flat surface like a hospital bed, exam table, or even the floor if necessary. Tilt the infant's head slightly back to open their airway. However, avoid excessive tilting, which can compromise breathing.

DELIVERING INFANT CHEST COMPRESSIONS

Effective chest compressions are the backbone of infant CPR, maintaining blood circulation to deliver oxygen to vital organs. Use two fingers for CPR, placing them just below the nipple line on the infant's chest. Alternatively, if you're performing chest compressions alone, use the two-thumb encircling-hands technique for maximum efficiency.

Compress the chest about one-third of its depth, approximately 1.5 inches, and allow full chest recoil between compressions. Maintain a rate of 100 to 120 compressions per minute. To keep the rhythm, counting aloud or synchronizing compressions to the rhythm of a metronome can help. The compressions must be consistent and deep enough for effective CPR.
