

Quantification Theory

In this final lesson on symbolic logic, we'll take a very brief look at modern methods of representing the internal structure of propositions in first-order predicate calculus (or quantification theory). Incorporating all of the propositional calculus along with a few new symbols and rules of inference, the predicate calculus provides another way of handling the same logical forms we examined in our study of categorical logic.

Individuals, Predicates, and Quantifiers

In addition to the familiar symbols of the propositional calculus, quantification theory also employs special symbols of four special sorts:

- individual constants (a, b, c , etc.) represent particular individual things—Allison, Bill, or this car, for example.
- predicate constants (F, G, H , etc.) represent specific predicates—free, greedy, or heavy, for example.

Writing an individual symbol directly after a predicate symbol signifies that this thing has that property. Thus, using the above examples, Fa , Gb , and Hc would signify "Allison is free," "Bill is greedy," and "This car is heavy" respectively. Since these are complete statements, they can be combined using the statement connectives to form

compound
statements

as $Fa \bullet$

$Gb, Hg \supset$

Gb , and

$Hc \vee$

$\sim Hc$.

- individual variables (x, y, z , etc.) are employed to refer to any predicate generally.
- quantifiers are logical operators that signify the range of individuals to which individual variables apply, either all ((x)) or some ($(\exists x)$) .

	statement	individual	predicate
constants	$A, B, C \dots$	$a, b, c \dots$	$F, G, H \dots$
variables	$p, q, r \dots$	$\dots x, y, z$
operators	$\sim, \&, \vee,$ $\supset, =$	(x) $(\exists x)$
