

Part 1

A hyperbolic tessellation diagram and a tensor network; and a basic explanation of quantum entanglement (editor sketch)

An unstable particle splits two electrons, one spinning up and the other spinning down. But there is no way of knowing which is which. They are in a quantum state that is a mixture of both.

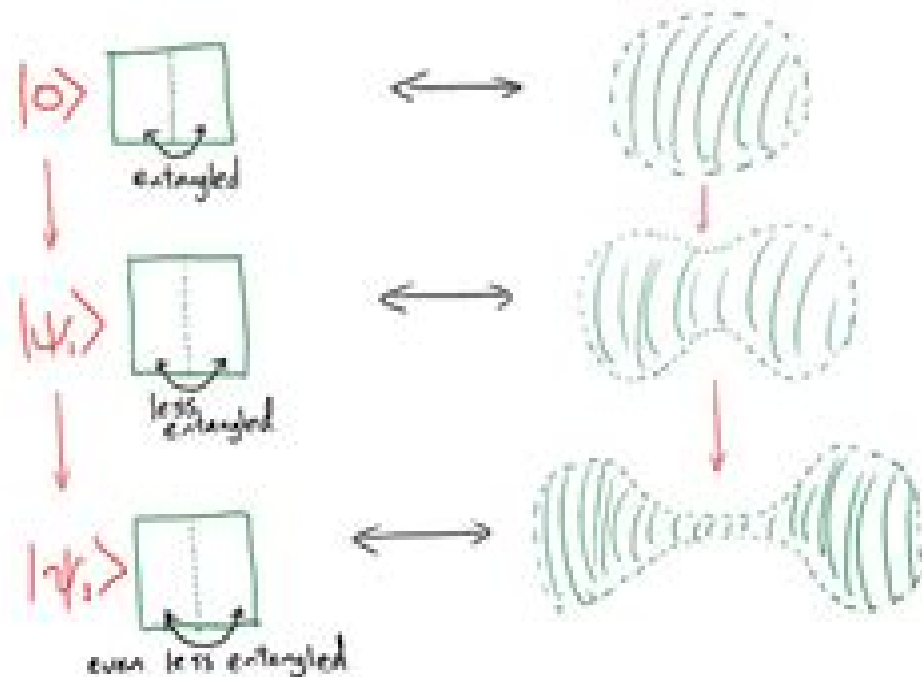

If the spin is up, then the observer knows the left-moving electron's spin is down — no matter how far away it is.

Whatever if the spin is down, the left-moving electron's spin must be up.
