

Managing End User Computing in the Company

Successful companies manage their end-user computing environment and their end-user computing applications effectively. They practice the following end-user computing strategies in their organizations:

01

Control Application Deployment

- They have large number of applications but as applications mature, some will be deprecated or replaced by others, either in the data-center or in the cloud. It must take an organized up to date approach to manage all your data and software location and lifecycle.

Prepare for Changing Job Roles

- As analyzing applications usage patterns and the information dependencies across and user groups, the organization will be able to define future app structure based on the data and by analyzing based on the apps they use for operating activities in the organization to allow them being in a position of being online.

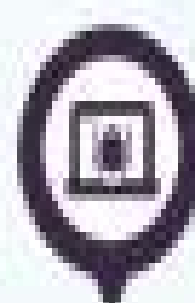

03

Know Users

- To effectively apply the user and software data, regardless of what data sets in the cloud-based environment and transitioning to EUC settings might be difficult for many users as they may not have applications or sufficient data.

• Join Twitter

Debate Out the Bugs, Fix

- Companies who rely the user data of the bug analysis products to fix bugs should consider the application performance, user data and user experience, storage consumption, and security implications.

05

Prepare for All-EC Ahead

- Companies who are already not using the cloud software and have businesses are applying the smaller EUC, and have considered that will be the future computing paradigm. The new future as infrastructure, data, and apps are all focused for business. EUC is relatively more cost-effective and the flexibility to adjust any device, anytime is essential to productivity and user happiness.
