

Manifestations of the Multiverse in Human Thought and its Implications to the Philosophical World

Daniel Lee¹

¹Fieldston School, USA

ABSTRACT

The concept of the multiverse has been widely acknowledged within the scientific world. Many of the possible dictates of the multiverse potentially challenge the underpinnings of much Enlightenment era political philosophy, however. This paper firstly explores historic, philosophical, and religious concepts related to time and the multiverse. It then presents the idea that the existence of the multiverse will fundamentally challenge the basic premises of Western political philosophy, particularly “states of nature” and personal autonomy. The paper concludes that a new generation of multiverse laws, new schools of philosophy, new theories about life and meaning, and possibly new religions will inevitably emerge if multiverse is proven to exist.

Introduction

In an interview with German newspaper Der Spiegel, renowned English theoretical physicist Stephen Hawking remarked, “We are just an advanced breed of monkeys on a minor planet of a very average star. But we can understand the universe. That makes us something very special” (Franke and Glass, 1988). For tens of thousands of years, human beings have pondered great mysteries about life, space, and the cosmos, hoping to find answers to questions regarding our purpose and place in the universe. According to a study conducted by the University of Edinburgh and the University of Kent, ancient Paleolithic and Neolithic cave paintings suggest that, around 40,000 years ago, humans first began keeping track of time by studying the position and movement of the stars (Imster, 2018). Over time, astronomers gained more knowledge of celestial bodies in the night sky. Around 1000 BCE, Assyro-Babylonians documented the first records of systematic astronomical observations, such as the periodic motions of stars and planets (European Space Agency, 2019). In the 1600s, Polish astronomer Nicolaus Copernicus proposed the first model of the solar system, in which each planet orbited around the sun (University of California, 2002). Each successive discovery created new knowledge about the universe (Jones, 2019). Ideas about life beyond Earth, however, did not stop at the limits of our universe. The term “multiverse” was coined in 1895 by American philosopher William James, who used it to refer to the complex moral meanings of natural phenomena (Aguirre, 2022). However, the concept itself dates back to the ancient Greek philosopher Democritus, who believed that the universe was made of atoms moving in an infinite void, combining and recombining in every possible way. Our world, he speculated, is simply one of these arrangements (Crumey, 2013).

Since then, many philosophers and scientists have proffered their beliefs regarding the multiverse. In the most basic sense, the modern scientific conception of the multiverse entails the idea that, in addition to our universe—in which everything, from the motion of the stars to the flight of a baseball, is subject to a certain set of natural laws and physical constants—other universes also exist, and that these universes are governed by different sets of laws and constants. In some models of the multiverse, all universes exist individually and independently. David Kellogg Lewis, an American philosopher, developed the paradigm of modal realism, which suggests that all of these possible universes coexist with equal reality, and each one is disconnected from the others. According to a similar model by Swedish-American physicist Max Tegmark and German computer scientist Jürgen Schmidhuber, our universe, like others, is composed of one formal mathematical system, and all such systems coexist in separate parallel universes. In contrast,

Manifestations Of Thought:

Manifestation Math Thoughts + Choices + Actions = Your Life Richard Spitzer, 2018-08-30 For over 2 000 years philosophers teachers scientists and everyday people have been interested in manifestation and attraction concepts And now science and quantum physics support many of the original observations about how people are connected to the vast universe of energy and information But how can we update the centuries of wisdom to a modern practical and usable manifestation process to achieve our individual goals Richard used his research expertise to analyze the historical teachings and the everyday evidence to create a new practical manifestation concept with simple to use practices If you believe that you are what you think and attract what you think about there is now a process to manage your thoughts choices and actions to achieve your goals We see the evidence of successful manifestation all around us people achieving their goals every day Manifestation has three stages thoughts process outcomes We can easily observe the original thoughts and the eventual outcomes But what happens in the middle to create a successful outcome What is the formula for success Richard has reverse engineered manifestation we can observe and filled in the steps that have been missing for how to transform thoughts into successful outcomes Every thought does not become your reality But there is a process and math based goal to achieve the critical balance of positive thoughts to negative thoughts to enter the successful manifestation zone Its almost that simple if you have the right guidance and a way to monitor to your progress Manifestation Math is a practical simple process to manifest goals using the basic math of the universe As Willie Nelson said if you replace negative thoughts with positive thoughts you will have a positive result Manifestation Math has created a simple process to bring this wisdom to everyone
