

knowledge on the subject area. There are also capacity constraints that include weak legal/regulatory frameworks and weak administrative capacity [13]. Therefore, having harmonised medicines regulations can assist the AU, through AMA, to effectively use TRIPS facilitation for the production and import of generic medical products that are protected by patents in one or more African countries [43].

Medicines regulatory harmonisation in Africa

The role of regional economic communities in regulatory harmonisation

Regulatory harmonisation refers to the process of NMRAs aligning technical requirements for the development and marketing of medical products [46]. In Africa, there are 6 RECs: Arab Maghrib Union (UMA), Common Market for Eastern and Southern Africa (COMESA), Community of Sahel-Saharan States (CEN-SAD), East African Community (EAC), Economic Community of Central African States (ECCAS), Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), Intergovernmental Authority on Development (IGAD), and the Southern African Development Community (SADC) [47]. Within the framework of the Pharmaceutical Manufacturing Plan for Africa (PMPA), the AMRH initiative has been implemented, in collaboration with WHO and partners, with the intention of supporting the strengthening of medical product regulatory systems in these RECs and member states [7, 10, 11, 16, 56, 43]. The partnership has resulted in RECs and regional health organisations, which have been supported to serve as regional information sharing platforms, benefiting from regulatory requirements, standards, systems, legislation and practices that are harmonised [10, 11, 26]. The intention of the work done by RECs is to be a stepping stone for the harmonisation of activities in Africa [11].

Launched on 30 March 2012 [23], the EAC medicines regulatory harmonisation (MRH) project was the first successful regional group of the AMRH initiative [9] and it signalled the beginning of the implementation phase of the initiative across Africa [5, 19]. In 2015, the SADC MRH project was launched and it absorbed the ZaZi-Bona collaborative medicines registration initiative [19, 36]. In the same year, the MRH programme for the West African region was launched in Accra, Ghana, focusing on the development of national and regional GMP roadmaps [19, 25, 26]. In addition, the Organization of Coordination for the Fight Against Epidemic Diseases in Central Africa (OCEAC) became involved in the AMRH initiative in July 2015 [29]. In April 2016, the ECOWAS member states signed the Khartoum Declaration to Call for Action towards medicines regulatory collaboration and harmonisation programme implementation [19, 25].

Through the RECs, the AMRH initiative has established a regional platform for medical products and health technologies' regulation which can be utilised for the building of trust, confidence, ownership as well as alignment especially for countries that are in the process of building medicines regulatory systems [10, 11]. The RECs have also supported medicines registration harmonisation by creating common pharmaceutical policies and operational plans backed by high-level political commitments and mandates [16, 18].

Challenges encountered in medicines regulatory harmonisation

Regulatory harmonisation in Africa is a challenge as a result of the wide array of regulatory environments and capacities [13]. Countries have different coverage approaches to their legal and regulatory frameworks based on their own sociocultural values, as well as historical and political landscapes [48]. This is one of the aspects that the AU Model Law can assist in after it has been adopted and implemented by the countries. In addition, regulatory divergence across borders can be a result of differences in the degree of acceptable risks and benefits, disease burden, vulnerable populations, and costs [48]. Harmonisation is also made more challenging by gaps in the development of a unified regulatory science body and the availability of a competent regulatory workforce [48]. In order for medical products regulation to be effective and yield the envisaged benefits, all aspects of regulation must be addressed [8], and regulators should adapt medicines regulatory harmonisation activities based on local circumstances [29]. It is also important for medicines regulatory harmonisation to take into consideration the different commercial, regulatory and healthcare interests [7].

Drawing lessons from the SADC region, potential barriers to harmonisation are related to differences in organisational structures of the NMRAs, legislative and regulatory provisions, and guidance documents [9]. Another regulatory harmonisation challenge is having differences in risk-benefit decisions and interpretation of legislation used by NMRAs for regulatory and product approvals [9]. For instance, the AU Model Law is being interpreted, domesticated and implemented differently according to the local context and needs [9]. Even in situations where the same legal and scientific frameworks are used, NMRAs are going to have different priorities in terms of risks and benefits during medical product regulation [9]. Moreover, the fact that the final decision on marketing authorisation, after completion of the product's technical assessment, is still the prerogative of each NMA is in itself a harmonisation challenge [9, 36].
