Steiner, 2011-08-14 Headache disorders are among the most common disorders of the nervous system They are pandemic and in many cases they are recurrent and can accompany the patient for the whole life These disorders impose a substantial burden on headache sufferers on their families and on society the individual impact is measured by the frequency and severity of attacks while the societal burden is measured in terms of loss of activity at work and school as well as of costs for the health system As a matter of facts headaches are ranked in the top ten and maybe the top five causes of disability worldwide they are therefore extraordinarily common Population based studies have mostly focused on migraine which even if it is the most frequently studied headache disorder is not the most common Other types of headache such as the more prevalent TTH and sub types of the more disabling chronic daily headache have so far received less attention and need to be better investigated This book will provide a useful tool to a wide medical population who is required specific skills to diagnose and manage these frequent and often disabling disorders Furthermore it could also represents a compendium for medical students who are usually introduced to this topic through multidisciplinary university programmes EBOOK:

Situated Intervention Teun Zuiderent-Jerak,2015-08-28 An exploration of sociological research that is neither detached nor engaged a new approach to sociological knowledge production with examples from health care In this book Teun Zuiderent-Jerak considers how the direct involvement of social scientists in the practices they study can lead to the production of sociological knowledge Neither detached sociological scholarship nor engaged social science this new approach to sociological research brings together two activities often viewed as belonging to different realms intervening in practices and furthering scholarly understanding of them Just as the natural sciences benefited from broadening their scholarship from theorizing to experiment so too could the social sciences. Additionally, Zuiderent Jerak points out rather than proceeding from a pre-set normative agenda, scholarly intervention allows for the experimental production of normativity. Scholars are far from detached but still may be surprised by the normative outcomes of the interactions within the experiment. Zuiderent Jerak illustrates situated intervention research with a series of examples drawn from health care. Among the topics addressed are patient compliance in hemophilia home care, the organization of oncology care, and the value of situated standardization, the relationship between standardization and patient centeredness, the development of patient centered pathways, value driven and savings driven approaches to the construction of health care markets, and multiple ontologies of safety in care for older adults. Finally, returning to the question of normativity in sociological research, Zuiderent Jerak proposes an ethics of specificity according to which research adapts its sociological responses to the practices studied. Sociology not only has more to offer to the practices it studies, it also has more to learn from them.

Advancing Quality Improvement Research Institute of Medicine, Board on Health Care Services, Forum on the Science of Health Care Quality Improvement and Implementation, 2007-07-29. The Institute of Medicine's Forum on the Science of Health Care Quality Improvement and Implementation held a workshop on January 16, 2007, in Washington, DC. The workshop had its roots in an earlier forum meeting when forum members discussed what is meant by the terms quality improvement and implementation science and became convinced that they mean different things to different people. At the time, the members also discussed the need to identify barriers to quality improvement research and to implementation science. Thus, the purpose of this workshop was to bring people together from various arenas to discuss what quality improvement is and what barriers exist in the health care industry to quality improvement and also to research about quality improvement. The summary that ensues is thus limited to the presentations and discussions during the workshop itself. We realize that there is a broader scope of issues pertaining to this subject area but are unable to address them in this summary document. The workshop's first session was devoted to experiences that various institutions have had with quality improvement. Recognizing the wealth of experiences available outside of health care services, the workshop included presenters from outside the health care service industry as well as from inside. This includes discussions from a variety of perspectives: non-health care services, health plans, hospitals, and nursing.

Advancing Quality Improvement Research: Challenges and Opportunities Workshop Summary describes the events of the workshop.
