reasons, combined reasons

So far we have learned that....

Arguments are set of statements containing reasons supporting a conclusion.

Conclusions are the primary claims of arguments; the claims we are trying to get others accept.

Reasons are the supporting claims. They support the conclusions.

So, both conclusions and reasons are types of claims.

Now, let us identify reasons in arguments and understand the different ways they might support the conclusions.

Reasons are claims that intend to support the conclusions.

These claims are also called PREMISES

A premise is simply any claim to put forward as support for the
