They came by boat

They came by boat - arriving in this strange
And southern land to find great trees that shed
Their bark but kept their leaves; they would not rate
Those trees as fine as those they knew back home.

They came by boat - and cursed the roots that sprang
To life in fields they thought they'd cleared; they watched
The skies for seasons like they'd always known,
And shook their fists at birds who mocked their plight.

They came by boat - and would not eat the bounty
That this country offered them, so stitched
The land with fences where they held the sheep
They raised, and watched their pastures turn to dust.

They came by boat - and never would admit
That others lived and loved this land before,
Had sung its ancient laws and danced its ways,
And painted country in their sacred sites.

They came by boat - and killed the folk from whom
They stole the land. They called their victims
Savages, to disguise their genocide
Which haunts their homes and all they've tried to build.

We came by boat - and still we dream of lands
Across the sea, and cannot settle down
To see this sacred land for what it is,
Nor take its offered blessing. But we know
We have to stop the folk who come by boat.
