Contemporary Challenges in Social Work Practice in Multicultural Societies

The fundamental mission of social work interventions is to offer culturally adequate responses to satisfy the basic human needs. Such culturally sensitive responses are translated in a greater diversity of social interventions at multiple levels: individual, family, group, organization, community and society.

Poignantly, at the time of writing this editorial (December 2015), Europe is facing an unprecedented migration turmoil due to waves of Syrian and Middle East refugees that have been and continue arriving on Europe's shores recently. The phenomenon has unequivocally named – and will most likely go down in history as – a major refugees crises. It is affecting countries worldwide, beyond Europe and will undoubtedly change the political, demographic and cultural landscape of our world, as we know it.

Social workers around the globe are involved or will be involved with these individuals, families and children who are attempting to reach places where they can feel safe and start a new life for themselves and their children. Thus, the theme of this special issue „Contemporary Challenges in Social Work Practice in Multicultural Societies” is serendipitously timely. This focus aims to capture and critically analyse the challenges of social work practice in our increasingly multi-cultural societies around the globe – both from the perspective of professionals and of service users.

The International Federation of Social Workers (2015) defines social work as [...] a practice-based profession and an academic discipline that promotes social change and development, social cohesion, and the empowerment and liberation of people. Principles of social justice, human rights, collective responsibility and respect for diversities are central to social work. (emphasis added)

This definition is highly relevant in the current context. It raises questions of how social workers apply those principles of social justice, human rights, collective responsibility and respect for diversities are central to social work in their work. Social workers need to respect the diversity of the societies in which they practice, taking into account individual, family, group and community differences. Social workers have a responsibility to challenge any discrimination, be it based on ability, age, culture, gender or sex, marital status, socio-economic status, political opinions, skin color, racial or other physical characteristics, sexual orientation or spiritual beliefs. Moreover, social workers have a duty of challenging unjust policies and practices.
