direction in every attitude that the death struggle had caused them to assume, in every stage of decomposition. . . . Indeed, the whole scene was weird and terrible beyond description. . . . Our horses seemed to feel the horror of it as much as we did, for they shook and snorted in evident terror."<sup>1</sup>

A number of innocent victims were killed. For several days after the assault, wrote Mrs Saunders, wife of the Commissioner of Delhi, "every native that could be found was killed by soldiers, women and children were spared." The famous Urdu poet Ghalib, who was in Delhi at that time, observed: "Here, there is a vast ocean of blood before me. God only knows what more I have to behold." The Bombay Telegraph reported: "All the city people found within the Wall were hanged on the spot. The number was considerable, as you may suppose when I tell you that in some houses, 40 to 50 persons were hiding."

The extent of damage suffered by Shahjahanabad during this period was enormous. Khana Bazar, Khanan-ku-Bazar, and the buildings in Chowk Saadullah were demolished. A visitor of the time wrote:

For miles, not a creature save a half-starved cat, and here and there an old hag groping about amidst the bones, old papers and eggs with which this once wealthy and popular place is strewn. It is a city of the dead.

The deposed emperor, Bahadur Shah Zafar, echoed the melancholy mood:

*I'm the light of no one's eye,
The rest of no one's heart am I,
That which can be of use to none
—A handful of dust am I!*<sup>2</sup>

And this is what he had to say about the tragic fate of Shah-jahanabad:

Remaking Cities (Routledge Revivals) Alison Ravetz, 2013-10-08 This book published in 1980 is an iconoclastic account of one of the pillars of the welfare state British town and country planning between 1945 and 1975 Always a fine balance between central control and market forces it was challenged by strains within and between the environmental professions and protest by people dispossessed or alienated by re shaped urban environments Remaking Cities critiques the export of western style planning to the developing world and reviews initiatives rooted in different understandings of growth appearing in those years Nearly forty years on many of the same issues beset us notably the depressingly familiar inner city problem despite countless reports funds and programmes But now our infrastructure and services once publicly owned are privatised and fragmented and local government progressively relegated The very core of planning development control is being pared in a struggle to regain the growth which led to our current crisis This gives fresh importance to the need for new modes of creating liveable sustainable environments emphasised in this important work
