billion annually to the Scottish economy Those firms or subsidiaries dependent on British Army RAF or Royal Navy orders under Article 346 of the European Union Treaties which allow the UK to reserve certain orders to national suppliers will lose such work which will be transferred to other parts of the UK It is also recognised that the market offered to defence suppliers in a separate Scotland will be negligible in size compared to that of the United Kingdom as a whole and the joint projects in which it participates A separate Scotland particularly one which has deported the Royal Navy's submarine force and potentially enforced unilateral nuclear disarmament upon the United Kingdom will not necessarily be seen as a reliable ally Similarly a future separate Scotland's access to secret technology owned elsewhere is unlikely to be automatic There will not necessarily be the maximum security clearance necessary to allow export to or collaboration with US or other suppliers or purchasers A separate Scotland is unlikely to be able to fund the level of research and development necessary to maintain Scottish companies at the cutting edge of technology The defence industry in Scotland is designed to meet the needs of its main customer the Ministry of Defence It is essential that the Scottish Government spells out as quickly as possible its intentions for procurement and research budgets and foreign and defence policies
