Nature Nurture And The Transition To Early Adolescence:

Nature, Nurture, and the Transition to Early Adolescence Stephen A. Petrill, Robert Plomin, John C. DeFries, John K. Hewitt, 2003-03-27 Some of the most intriguing issues in the study of cognitive social emotional and physical development arise in the debate over nature versus nurture a debate difficult to resolve because it is difficult to separate the respective contributions of genes and environment to development The most powerful approach to this separation is through longitudinal adoption studies The Colorado Adoption Project CAP is the only longitudinal adoption study in existence examining development continuously from birth to adolescence which makes it a unique powerful and tremendously valuable resource CAP is an ongoing assessment of 245 adopted children and 245 biological control children assessed from birth to early adolescence This book is the fourth in a series describing CAP results This latest volume edited by four eminent researchers in developmental psychology builds on the large body of research already generated by investigating the role of genes and environments on early adolescent development Because it is the only volume on the most comprehensive investigation of the effect of genes and environments on early adolescent development this work will be invaluable to researchers in developmental cognitive and social psychology

DeLeire, 2004-07-22 The papers in this volume bring together a cross disciplinary mix of researchers developmental psychologists evolutionary biologists economists anthropologists and sociologists working on the common theme of investments in children The interdisciplinary conceptual framework adopted by this collection of papers is loosely built around the idea that there are two broad dimensions of parental investments These include resources e g income wealth on the one hand and behaviors e g parental instrumental support and parental activities that promote warmth socialization and cognitive stimulation on the other Believing that parental investments yield a return in improved child and young adult outcomes the papers discuss how parents differ in terms of the resources they have available to invest the choices parents make the behaviors they engage in and relevant policy and program interventions More specifically core questions addressed by the authors include Why do some families invest while others do not and are differential investment patterns related to biology economics or social factors What constitutes a successful investment portfolio How are investments measured and or characterized Are different investments interchangeable compensating or off setting Given a set of resources why are some families able to make more effective investments in child outcomes How well do these investments affect outcomes for children and for these children as young adults Can interventions or public policies help families build assets or become better investors in their children s potential Developing a better understanding of what investments matter when they matter and how resources can be successfully invested in children s potential is key to shaping efficient interventions and social policies Knowledge of how parents invest and what strategies are effective may help policies which seek to further empower and enable parental involvement and choice for their children Essentials of Lewis's Child and Adolescent Psychiatry Fred
