

TASK 1 – SLAVERY IN HISTORY AND MEMORY

A.

“Slavery! Slavery!”, made by Kara Walker, uses black silhouette cutouts to represent slavery at its peak. In this art piece, Walker is “depicting historical narratives haunted by sexuality, violence, and subjugation” (Walker Art Center, 2023). Slaves in this time faced brutality and suffering on the plantations, and Walker does a great job artistically representing all the hardships they faced during this time period. In addition, Walker also shows through these images the differences in lifestyle enslaved people and slave owners experienced. You see ladies in nice dresses while the slaves are barefoot or have broken boots. You see the hard work the slaves had to put in day in and day out while the owners walked along with their noses turned up, believing they were the superior race.

The next secondary source I chose to analyze was Chapter 11 of The American Yawp. In this excerpt, it talks about the history of the slave trade. Although slavery existed in America before the Cotton Revolution, it exploded during the 1800s “as farmers expanded their lands, planted more crops, and entered the international trade market” (Locke & Wright, 2019). This shows more than the institution of slavery, rather the growth of slavery and why it boomed during this time. Plantation owners were getting rich on cotton, causing them to buy more land and, in turn, buy more slaves (Locke & Wright, 2019). When you take all of that into account, you also must consider the treatment of these slaves. They were beaten, overworked, and separated from their families throughout those years without a second thought from their owners. The practice overall was inhumane, and this piece outlines that very well.

When reviewing both sources, I believe the intended audience could be anyone. While Walker’s piece might catch the eye of someone more interested in the arts, it could be viewed by anyone looking to dive deeper into the history of slavery. The work of Locke and Wright’s “The American Yawp” is more academic and could be intended for experts on the topics of slavery or someone looking to become more versed in the subject.

The similarities between these two sources are simple: they both outline the horrors African Americans faced during these times. The difference, however, is that Walker’s piece is focused solely on the mistreatment of slaves through cut-outs, while Locke’s and Wright’s focus was mostly on the reason behind the exponential increase in slavery during the 1800s with the technology to back it, touching only slightly on the inhumanity slaves faced during this period.

B.

The first primary source I chose to analyze was the “Letter from Anthony Burns.” In summary, this source was a letter to the Baptist church as he was being excommunicated for escaping his servitude and refusing to return willingly. His perspective in this letter is that he should not have to return because the Lord willed him to be free (Burns, 1855). He is directly quoting the bible to show how slavery is wrong and how no man should have to endure the pain in which he had.
