Post-Independence era

The independent Kenyan government developed land adjudication policies in pastoral areas (1960s and 1970s).

This led to the establishment of group ranches and in Siambu, Samburu district, privatization of 23 individual parcels of land (Lesorol, 2003; Mwangi 2007).

Privatization shifted de jure control over land from the community to individual land owners and created new land use activities - large-scale cultivation, rental and sale of land.

Privatization of land in Samburu emerged out of social conflict among groups with different interests and differential bargaining power. Internal and external factors to the community contributed to this change.
