River Management: the Australasian Experience
Sandra Briggs and Brian Finlayson (Eds.), Wiley,
Chichester, 2000, ISBN 0-471-96976-1; UK£75.00, 301 pp.

The rationale for this book is stated at the outset by the editors; namely, the geomorphology and the hydrology of Australia, coupled with the nature of the colonial administration has provided a unique context for river management. Note that only the third of these justifications applies to New Zealand, of which more later. The book consists of nine case studies of river management in Australasia (only one of which is from New Zealand), one technical paper on measuring stream condition (Ladson and White), and a wide-ranging overview of human impacts on Australian rivers. In this review, Ian Rutherford shows how since the onset of European settlement human impacts on Australian rivers have been clear and well documented, so enabling three phases of impact to be identified: an inception phase, an engineering phase and an environmental phase. Although often with longer and more complex histories, such a sequence of phases can be applied to other parts of the world as well. The remaining case studies are varied and individually informative: for example, Juliet Bied's discussion of mining waste impact in Tasmania, and Rob Warner's assessment of stormwater management in urban Sydney provide insights into particular issues. Perhaps most useful is Gippel's reporting of five case studies that collectively show how difficult it is to find universally acceptable ways of managing environmental flows in regulated rivers. His suggestion that training should concentrate on providing river managers with tools that can be adapted to the requirements of specific sites is one that has been echoed in other recent books on environmental management.

Overall, the usefulness of this book depends on the way in which the case studies come together to deliver more general messages about river management. This aspect of the book is slightly disappointing, although the editors in their opening and closing chapters, and Rutherford in his review, make serious attempts at distilling generalities from the case studies. In particular, Rutherford's chapter alone justifies the editors' rationale for the book. Some, but not all, of the other chapters address general issues directly. As with other edited volumes over the past decade, the finished product does not quite live up to the intentions of the editors. As other reviewers have noted about different volumes the justification for such collections is far from clear: either a collection of papers in a relevant journal, or a much more specifically targeted book (probably written by one or two people) would have been of greater use to potential users. This book will be bought by institutional libraries, being rather too costly for most individuals to justify, and will be used by students and researchers. However, I doubt that many users will read more than one or two chapters in detail, which is unfortunate because the potential exists for a more structured analysis of Australian river management than this book provides.

To conclude with a return to the Australian basis of the book, Rutherford identifies a further spatial restriction in the literature, namely that most reported cases come from the south-east part of the Australian mainland, generally within a few hours drive of a university. The place of New Zealand in this book is rather strange: not only does just one of the papers consider New Zealand explicitly, but it's physical characteristics are so different from those of its western neighbour that attempts to draw general messages from the case studies in the book are of little or no relevance on the east side of the Tasman Sea. A totally different book could have been prepared using New Zealand material, and the one case study here of the Waiau River scarcely does justice to the long history of river management in that
