A History of Natural Philosophy Edward Grant, 2007-01-22

Natural philosophy encompassed all natural phenomena of the physical world. It sought to discover the physical causes of all natural effects and was little concerned with mathematics. By contrast, the exact mathematical sciences were narrowly confined to various computations that did not involve physical causes functioning totally independently of natural philosophy. Although this began slowly to change in the late Middle Ages, a much more thoroughgoing union of natural philosophy and mathematics occurred in the seventeenth century and thereby made the Scientific Revolution possible. The title of Isaac Newton's great work The Mathematical Principles of Natural Philosophy perfectly reflects the new relationship. Natural philosophy became the Great Mother of the Sciences, which by the nineteenth century had nourished the manifold chemical, physical, and biological sciences to maturity, thus enabling them to leave the Great Mother and emerge as the multiplicity of independent sciences we know today. Instruments and the Imagination Thomas L. Hankins, Robert J. Silverman, 2014-07-14

Thomas Hankins and Robert Silverman investigate an array of instruments from the seventeenth through the nineteenth century that seem at first to be marginal to science: magnetic clocks that were said to operate by the movements of sunflower seeds; magic lanterns; ocular harpsichords; machines that played different colored lights in harmonious mixtures; Aeolian harps; a form of wind chime; and other instruments of natural magic designed to produce wondrous effects. By looking at these and the first recording instruments, the stereoscope and speaking machines, the authors show that scientific instruments first made their appearance as devices used to evoke wonder in the beholder, as in works of magic and the theater. The authors also demonstrate that these instruments, even though they were often tricks, were seen by their inventors as more than trickery. In the view of Athanasius Kircher, for instance, the sunflower clock was not merely a hoax but an effort to demonstrate, however fraudulently, his truly held belief that the ability of a flower to follow the sun was due to the same cosmic magnetic influence as that which moved the planets and caused the rotation of the earth. The marvels revealed in this work raise and answer questions about the connections between natural science and natural magic, the meaning of demonstration, the role of language and the senses in science, and the connections among art, music, literature, and natural science.
