The Cultural Nature of Human Development Barbara Rogoff, 2003-02-13 Three year old Kwara ae children in Oceania act as caregivers of their younger siblings but in the UK it is an offense to leave a child under age 14 ears without adult supervision In the Efe community in Zaire infants routinely use machetes with safety and some skill although U S middle class adults often do not trust young children with knives What explains these marked differences in the capabilities of these children Until recently traditional understandings of human development held that a child s development is universal and that children have characteristics and skills that develop independently of cultural processes Barbara Rogoff argues however that human development must be understood as a cultural process not simply a biological or psychological one Individuals develop as members of a community and their development can only be fully understood by examining the practices and circumstances of their communities
