

PRINCIPLES OF PHYSICAL TRAINING

- Principle of Adaptation – “If a specific physiological capacity is taxed by a physical training stimulus within a certain range and on a regular basis, this physiological capacity usually expands.” The body improves when it is physically stressed at a higher level than it is currently use to.
- Principle of Specificity – The body will adapt very specifically to the type and nature of training. Ie. If you want to run a marathon, you have to do long distance running.
- Principle of Progressive Overload- As the body adapts to the demands of exercise by improving, the amount of exercise needs to also progressively increase in order for fitness to continue to improve.
- Placing increasing amounts of stress on the body causes adaptations that improve fitness; progression is critical!
 - FITT principle for overload:
 - Frequency—How often
 - Intensity—How hard
 - Time—How long (duration)
 - Type—Mode of activity
